The classroom

In the University’s tightly-knit Residential College System, students bring their growing expertise in a multitude of fields to the same table to examine a given issue or text. In the classroom, the same research assistant, and a linguistics enthusiast can gather around a single issue, no matter their major. In the University’s Thinking Band, students can shape the world we live in. The Core offers a broad background and an emphasis on primary texts evoke the debates that have unfolded in this wide-ranging conversation. Small, discussion-based classes in Core discussion topics allow students to participate in conversations with a maximum of fewer students, and an emphasis on primary texts can change the way students learn. The Core is a place for students to think about the world and its impact on the world. It is a place for students to reflect on their identity, their values, and their role in shaping the world. It is a place for students to explore their passions, to challenge their assumptions, and to develop critical thinking skills. The Core is a place for students to find their voice, to express themselves, and to make a difference in the world.
